Jen is an experienced patent attorney with a focus on patent preparation, prosecution, and strategic client counseling in intellectual property matters. She works primarily in the fields of biotechnology, pharmaceuticals, chemicals, and medical technologies, with a strong history of guiding clients through complex patent processes. Jen's skills include providing patent opinions, such as freedom to operate, patentability, infringement, validity, and landscape analyses, assisting clients in navigating the complexities of patent law and making informed decisions.

Jen counsels clients at every stage, from startups to growth-stage companies and established industry leaders. She works closely with clients to develop tailored intellectual property strategies that align with their business goals, helping them secure and maximize the value of their patents. Whether guiding a startup through its first patent filings or advising a mature company on portfolio management and patent enforcement, Jen's approach is focused on delivering practical, forward-thinking solutions that drive business success.

Beyond her private practice experience, Jen has also served as in-house patent counsel, giving her a valuable business-oriented perspective on IP strategy and portfolio management. Her background in pulmonary and molecular biology research complements her legal practice, allowing her to bring a scientifically informed perspective to her work.
